1. History of the Washington School of World Studies

The Washington School of World Studies draws its support from the global organizational resources of People to People Ambassador Programs. From marketing to development and selection of curriculum materials and providers, from travel services to organizing overseas activities, from screening teacher leaders to ensuring expert guidance and safe personal interactions within the destination countries, the organization fully supports the Washington School of World Studies' mission of creating fully rounded learning experiences for our students (both virtual and experiential), and takes its guidance in development of support materials from the standards set by the Washington School of World Studies.

The Washington School of World Studies is affiliated with and housed within the People to People Ambassador Programs headquarters located in Spokane, Washington. People to People's excellent reputation around the world provides direct benefit to the school both through direct availability of resources and by shifting parental focus from safety concerns to program benefits. Students and families are assured of the highest quality experiences in customer service, educational travel, and virtual education.

2. Accreditation

The Washington School of World Studies (WSWS) is both a fully accredited travel study school and fully accredited distance-learning school recognized by the Northwest Association of Accredited Schools (NAAS). NAAS is one of the six regional accrediting institutions.

The other recognized associations are: Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools, New England Association of Schools and Colleges, North Central Association of Colleges and Schools, Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, and Western Association of Schools and Colleges.

NAAS has a reciprocity agreement with these five institutions. If your local school district is also recognized by one of these accrediting institutions, acceptance of our credit should be assured as part of that reciprocity agreement.
